FORD'S FRIENDS ARRIVE

Twice the night before Christmas, and all thro' the house, no creature were stirring except a brave house, he crawled and he strutted, in merciless glee, across and forlorn every portion of it, until my poor being was frenzied with itching, to think it was mastered by a measly lichen. I pulled off all garments, I groaned and I swore, to exterminate one, or a whole dozen more, for I felt in my anger as if my poor back had sustained a great mob, in each cranny and crack.

Hello! said his lordship, as uncovered he stood, "how goes it," "look here, you're disturbing my brood," say "Cholly," I'll warn you, don't fume and get gay, for with me, same as "freckles," just come out, get away!—Don't you know in this world all creatures must live? I here now adjure thee, forget and forgive—I'll post you. When Noah in Ark drove his stock, my grandpa and grandpa were pets of his flock, if the Lord hadn't wanted us, here on this earth don't you realize, "graybacks" would never had birth? and now you seek life, just because one seeks food, George, in due time you shall nurture a brood; I just tripped from Prescott, 'twas a cruel hard tramp, but I'm fully repaid, as your store'll be my camp; those old traps and treasures, that you have in store, just suits my designs, I'll breed in them a score; whoopee! don't get gay, no mortal can dodge us, rich, poor, and precise, all must quietly lodge us.

You say I am sick, and frizzled, and plump, you dance, wherefore not, we feed from ankle to rump!—Say Ford have you read Bobbie Burns' grand sonnet where one of our kind tipped the misses plumed bonnet? That was done my dear lord, our feathers to grace—But wasn't it grand when he crawled up her hat to see her friends titter at her new cravat (?)—Well! ta! ta! old fury settle down to your work, I must rest, and digest the absorbent. I've drawn from your birch Christmas is really here, but not buyers—I have selected for the holidays all sorts of nice things; are you going to pass them by? You'll break my heart and bust my plans, for I intended with the expected profits, to buy "Sarah" a real good shop worn bonnet. She has suggested a ring, but when asked whether for nose or ears, she got madder'n a wet hen, and muttered about fingers and wrists—That gal thinks I'm easy—believe me she's not, as her limit is eight smacks to the minute, whereas I claim ten—Never satisfied.
